FATAL RIOT AMONG THE TARTARS.

Advised received from the Caucasus give the following particulars of a fatal riot that took place at Yekim on the 2nd inst. between the Tartars and the Russians. A Tartar girl was engaged to be married to a well-to-do young man of the same race, but on the evening that the ceremony was to have been performed she refused to go, and the result was that a riot broke out. The Tartars, who were armed with clubs and pistols, proceeded to the bridegroom's quarters to chastise him. In the meantime, however, a complete defense had been organized, and the result was that a battle commenced between the belligerents, who were armed with clubs and pistols. Hearing of the riot, which took place close to the fortress of Baku, the governor sent a company of infantry to restore peace. But the riot had assumed such proportions that soldiers were unable to effect anything. Reinforcements, armed with ball cartridges, were then sent, and after a short time a full battalion was marched to the spot. As soon as the Tartars saw the military they began pelting them with stones, which in a few minutes caused a great many of the Tartars to be killed. The Tartars then fled, and a court-martial has been convened to try the prisoners, who number 43. Since the event the Tartar population has manifested a strong feeling of hostility towards the Russian authorities.

A FLOWER HYMN

Glory to God for flowers!
 They lift our thoughts from earth
 So lovely hath Thine made them, Lord,
 They teach Thy smile to wear.
 Red roses tell Thy heart,
 Glowing with love divine,
 Deep pierced for a world's sin,
 That we might all be Thine.
 To show Thy spotless robe
 Is to the lily given,
 The robe Thou givest to heaven,
 That they may dwell in Thine own.
 The many fragrant bloom,
 Each with a separate grace,
 Thy Spirit's various gifts pouring
 In each true Christian soul.
 Others we love not least,
 Thy violet no colour gives Like some that do a world of good
 In their own quiet way.
 Tho' other welcome flowers
 Can health or sickness bless,
 Lord, keep these sooth hearts of ours
 From under thanklessness.
 Glory to God for flowers!
 We would our praise round Thee
 Lord, send upon our trusting hearts
 Thy holy grace, like dew.

RUSSIAN POPULATION.

What Russian wants is population, not territory. Said, indeed, it is to see her drifting off the finest of her sons to the rich and fertile battle fields of the vast land waste now devastated in the rich plains of the Oka and the Volga struck us with amazement. The soil of Central Russia is rich, and the whole country from Moscow to Nijni might be one vast corn field, but the tiller of the ground is absent. The Garrison of Nijni, 15,000 men, had been marched south, and the barracks seemed left to about two companies of artillery. The reserves were being called up just before we arrived, and these married men were now disarmed and sent to the front. The changing the mighty Volga, some 1,000 feet above it, and swept the horizon with a glass, far as the eye could reach was one green plain melting into distance all a rich alluvial deposit. Here and there heads of cattle depastured it. Occasionally there were patches of wheat, but for the most part the scene resembled that of some prairie lands on the Upper Mississippi. I remember then thirty years ago, when I collected in the same region, the first efforts in what was then the far west. There is room enough for millions of Russians to increase and multiply here, if only the highways of commerce be open from that Nijni which old tradition and habit, as well as nature, have made the commercial entrepot of Central Russia.—Leisure Hour.

SINGING.

It is not advisable to begin singing at too early an age even though considerable taste and talent be developed. With most girls it would be dangerous to allow them to sing at all before the age of seventeen, and even then great care should be taken that the vocal organ be not overtaxed. With men the habit of commencing is considerably later, and it is not unnecessary that there should be an interval of repose between the time when the key's voice breaks and that when the tenor or baritone register asserts itself. In the case of girls, it is difficult to ascertain with absolute certainty the quality of voice possessed, as in some instances the low notes of a girl of eighteen or nineteen possess the resonance and depth of a contralto, the prevailing characteristic being the higher register, in that of a soprano. It is obvious that in the case of this nature the extreme notes, either high or low, should not be attacked until time has fully demonstrated the exact register of the voice under consideration. It is of the utmost importance, also, that students should study the progressive exercises, and those only, of the master, in whom it must be supposed, implicit confidence is placed, as the work of months may be undone by a misdirected flight into regions in which their voices are not yet adapted to. However their unions are not supported. It is a common observation to find amateurs provoking ridicule, rather than exciting pleasure, by reason of attempts at songs far above their reach; and in this particular it must be allowed, that men sin more than women, especially in the case of that spoiled darling of the drawing-room—the amateur tenor.—London.

THE FIRST ENGLISH TRAGEDY.

The first English tragedy, "Gorboduc," was written for the Christmas festivities of the Inner Temple in the year 1561, by two young members of that Inn—Thomas Norton, then twenty-nine years old, and Thomas Sackville, then aged twenty-five. There was a reason for the choice of subject. Elizabeth had just ascended the throne. Before her accession England had been a house divided against itself by serious conflicts of opinion. Elizabeth was queen of a divided people. In her first speech from the throne she said that her desire was "to secure and unite the people of this realm in one uniform order, to the honour and glory of God, and to general tranquillity," and she made good and unity the motto which they were to shoot at. "But unity was hard to attain. When she had been queen not quite a year, the Spanish Ambassador reported from London to the Count de Feria, "It is the devil's own business here. But the Catholics grow stronger daily," and the heretics are quarrelling with one another so bitterly that they have fallen with their other enemies." Elizabeth was probably the first to say anything of the kind in writing. In August, 1562, Mary Stuart landed in Scotland. Sackville and Norton, therefore, one of them a young poet with the aspirations of a statesman, the other a man intensely interested in the contest against Roman Catholic influence—resolved to present before their audience of literary councillors, lawyers, and other gentlemen, a play which should urge with all possible force "concord and unity" as the very mark at which a nation must shoot. Their patriotic purpose was to insist on the queen's thought, by writing a play that should dwell throughout upon the danger hanging over any nation that as a house divided against itself. The pin-point of Robert Dudley, high in favour with the queen, grand favourite of the queen, would add his witness to the common report of that zeal for the welfare of England, which had caused the writers of this play to insist with all their might upon concord and unity as the very mark at which good Englishmen should aim. To the queen, therefore, added to the list of all emphasis in her own mind, the grand old phrase in her own mouth, "concord and unity," repeated about a fortnight later—that is to say, on the 18th of January, 1562 (new style)—before herself and her court at Whitehall. It thus had the conspicuous success that, in a new thing, always suggests imitation. A contemporary MS. note says of the performance before Queen Elizabeth that "on the 16th of January, 1562, (new style) there was a play in the Swan Theatre, Whitehall, Westminster, by the gentle-men of the Temple after a great make, for there was a great scaffold in the hall, with great triumph, as has been seen, and the morrow after the scaffold was taken down."

PRECEDENCE

When James the First remarked, "Alas, it is impossible for me to make you gentlemen," he called attention to the natural inequality of his authority, and the impossibility of endowing a churchman with a democratic sentiment, he was heedful also of what social opinion would decline to recognize. In such decisions on questions of dignity if they were gross violations of common sense and justice. Though he could bestow a title by a stroke of the pen, no effort of the monarch could give a peasant nobility or a noble a title. It was a matter of course to draw rules of precedence and investiture on outward observance of ceremony, but a very difficult matter to secure cordial acquiescence in arbitrary and unwarranted ordinances. Within the precincts of the court marshals and chamberlains were to take care that no baron, no knight, no worthy took licence to wear a more costly robe than he was entitled to, by the rank of his office, but no regiment of lordly cavaliers and officers at arms could compel society to cherish more respect for a duke of dubious pedigree and battered reputation than for an earl of stanchness known for his valour. All the king's horses and men could not habituate Humpty Dumpty to the world's esteem, when a single one falls from his place, the king's horses and men, and shown himself nothing better than a broken egg. "No despot could deprive his lieges of their natural right to measure a man's worthiness by a natural instead of a conventional standard. It was in the nature of things that various individuals should be more or less fitted to determine the degree in which the dependents should regard him as venerable and honoured." In short, there never was a time when precedence meant

CARVALHO AND HER SON

Madame Miolan-Carvalho, when acting, delights in a basin of soup smoking hot, and flavoured with greatest chesnee, for your back she has a magnificent soup, and she has a magnificent soup at Marseilles.

She has a magnificent soup at arriving there was a magnificent soup where she could order her favourite dish. She was recommended an humble restaurant just by the theatre, and, going there, gave her order in person to the cook-mine host his servant-maid, and placing a gigantic basin in her hands, told her to take Madame Carvalho, on the table.

He added that orders had been given to let her pass with her bowl, and, on the girl's assurance that she would recognise the cavatines, sent her off with the soup.

Her body gave way before the soup, and, carrying the sacred meal, she went to the theatre, and telling the wings, the caught sight of Madame Carvalho, who was singing the finale of the first act of Lucia. Ravenswood and his betrothed were just about to begin the passionate stretta—which brings down the curtain, when the magnificent basin in front of her tureen on the table, sank in the cover, and the wings, lifting up the cover, and the wings, in a spasm, she exclaimed, "Bogging your pardon for interrupting you, sir, and the lady—but here's the soup!"
